Why choose this Master course?

Graduates of the master's degree program in "Conflict Management and Humanitarian Action" develop a wide range of knowledge including practical and theoretical aspects of conflict management and humanitarian actions in a intercultural environment. They are provided with key issues and current debates on humanitarian responses in complex emergency situations through a variety of modules and seminars presented by academics, practitioners and organisations that shape humanitarian responses around the world.

Key Topics

The master discusses global challenges faced by the humanitarian sector throughout overviews and case studies given by practitioners and experts in the field. Students are provided with critical analyses of practices and policies of humanitarian responses, especially in prominent sectors such as: global health, migration, management in humanitarian interventions; advocacy and communication; humanitarian negotiation, conflict resolution practices, scientific and cultural diplomacy in an intercultural context.

Ad-hoc Seminars

A series of seminars have been thought to complement the theoretical part of the course, providing a more practical and interactive experience. This includes role play, presentations and case studies. Seminars focus on practical exercises, which are provided for developing adequate tools to deal with humanitarian dilemmas and adapting the project strategy to difficult and complex environments. Graduates grasp practical notions including reporting in the humanitarian context, such as: context analysis, identifying main humanitarian actors and needs, building advocacy/ communication strategy; and, how to conduct operational research.
